Open letter:

Let's spread holiday cheer, not diet-related diseases, this festive season.

We write to you to express our deep concern over the Coca-Cola's company's continued promotion of sugary drinks to children, young people and the general population during the holiday season. At a time when childhood obesity rates have reached record highs, such promotional tactics are not just in poor taste – they urgently need to be brought to a halt.

The signatories of this letter include Hugh Fearnley-Whittingstall, Baroness Boycott, Directors of Public Health, elected members, public health advocacy organisations and local healthy eating campaign coordinators, and we collectively request that Coca-Cola change its current Christmas Truck Tour promotional strategy by stopping the free distribution of Coca-Cola original taste.

Childhood obesity figures have again risen this year and show no signs of slowing down. The latest figures reveal that almost one in four children are overweight or obese when they start primary school and over one in three by the time they leave primary school¹. If we don't take drastic action, half of all UK children will be overweight or obese by 2020.

This year is also marked by a rise in hospital admissions for tooth extraction – up to 26,111 hospital admissions for tooth decay among five to nine-year-olds, and tooth decay is the leading cause of admissions for this age group². And nearly a half of 15 year olds in the UK have tooth decay in their permanent teeth.

Even more worryingly, the above figures are dramatically worse for children and young people living in deprived communities.

While there is a growing network of SUGAR SMART campaigns across the UK working with local organisations, education settings, businesses and individuals to reduce sugar overconsumption and improve local food environments, their brilliant work is being undone by such marketing tactics promoting products high in sugar. Even one 150ml can of Classic Coke contains over 16 grams of sugar, nearly the entire maximum daily limit for a 6-year-old. And of course, there is no safe sugar limit to avoid tooth decay.

It's with these less than cheerful figures in mind that we ask you to stop promoting sugary drinks during the Coca-Cola Christmas Truck Tour to the general public this year - in particular to children.

Wishing you and everyone in the UK a holiday season in good health,

The Undersigned
